

Jacob WINKELMAN, a minor, by and through his parents and legal guardians, Jeff and Sandee WINKELMAN, Plaintiffs-Appellants, v. PARMA CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT, Defendant-Appellee

U.S. Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit

04-4159

September 20, 2005

Appeal from the U.S. District Court, Northern District of Ohio.

UNPUBLISHED

Case Summary

Upholding its reasoning in a recent, similar case, the 6th Circuit, in an unpublished opinion, dismissed the claim by parents of a student with a disability because they were not represented by counsel. The 6th Circuit explained that it was bound by precedent. It interpreted the IDEA to mean that parents did not have the right to act as their child's counsel in federal court. Although the parents argued that the reasoning of the 1st Circuit should apply, the court rejected that argument. The court had expressly rejected the 1st Circuit's interpretation of the statute in Cavanaugh in its prior ruling.

Judge / Administrative Officer

SILER

Judge / Administrative Officer

SUTTON

Judge / Administrative Officer

SHARP

Full Text

APPEARANCES:

Jeff Winkelman, Parma, OH, pro se.

Sandee Winkelman, Parma, OH, pro se.

Christina H. Peer, Christine M. Tomko Cossler, Squire, Sanders & Dempsey, Cleveland, OH, for Defendant-Appellee.

Before SILER and SUTTON, Circuit Judges; SHARP, District Judge.*

PER CURIAM.

Jeff and Sandee Winkelman brought this action under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), see 20 U.S.C. § 1400 et seq., seeking an appropriate educational placement for their son, Jacob. Unable to obtain relief in the district court, they filed this appeal.

Before reaching the merits of the appeal, we face a threshold question about the authority of the Winkelmans to appear pro se in asserting Jacob's rights under the IDEA. Our recent decision in Cavanaugh v. Cardinal Local School District, 409 F.3d 753 (6th Cir.2005), provides a dispositive answer to this question and (for now) to this appeal. According to Cavanaugh, "the IDEA does not grant parents the right to represent their child in federal court." Id. at 756. In reaching this conclusion, we reasoned that the IDEA "'expressly provided that parents were entitled to represent their child in administrative proceedings'" but did not "'carve out an exception to permit parents to represent their child in federal proceedings,'" an omission that prompted the inference "'that Congress only intended to let parents represent their children in administrative proceedings.'" Id. (quoting Collinsgru v. Palmyra Bd. of Educ., 161 F.3d 225, 232 (3d Cir.1998)); see also id. ("[T]he language of the IDEA evidences a congressional intent to prohibit non-lawyer parents from representing their minor children in suits brought under its provisions."). At the same time, we also concluded that parents cannot pursue their own substantive IDEA claim pro se, because the IDEA does not grant parents a substantive right to have their child receive a free appropriate public education. See id. at 757 ("[T]he text of the IDEA does not support the proposition that its guarantee of a [free appropriate public education] is a right that [a child] shares jointly with his parents."); id. ("[T]he intended beneficiary of the IDEA is not the parents of the individual with a disability, but the disabled individual.") (quotation omitted).

In urging us to reach a contrary conclusion, the Winkelmanns make two arguments that Cavanaugh specifically considered and rejected. In concluding that "the language of the IDEA evidences a congressional intent to prohibit non-lawyer parents from representing their minor children in suits brought under its provisions," id. at 756, Cavanaugh contradicts the Winkelmanns' claim that the legislative purpose of the statute supports their right to proceed pro se. And Cavanaugh likewise "considered, and reject[ed], the reasoning of the First Circuit in Maroni [v. Pemi-Baker Regional School District], 346 F.3d 247 (1st Cir.2003) ]," upon which the Winkelmanns rely here. Cavanaugh, 409 F.3d at 757. Under these circumstances, we must follow the course that Cavanaugh has charted for us. We accordingly dismiss the appeal unless "within 30 days of the entry of this opinion the docket on appeal reflects the entry of appearance of counsel" to represent Jacob. Id.

*The Honorable Allen Sharp, United States District Judge for the Northern District of Indiana, sitting by designation.

Cases Cited

409 F.3d 753
161 F.3d 225
346 F.3d 247